Business revival

THE NEW financial year has kicked-off with renewed business investment along Wellington’s main street.

Wednesday, July 1 heralded the exciting positive news of the announcement of several businesses changing hands and others in the process of negotiations.

Big news for the Wellington region’s real estate industry was the announcement of the sale of Plasto and Company to recent town arrival, Ray White Richardson and Sinclair.

In the automotive industry, Daniel Blackhall’s One Stop Auto has also changed hands, while undertaker of many decades, David Taylor sold his Wellington Funeral Home to Jake Hubbard of Parkes.

The agricultural industry heard news that Russell and Kathryn Nott and son, Brendan, who have serviced farmers and townfolk alike also for decades, sold their family Nott’s Rural and Domestic to Canowindra based Conway Rural, a family-owned and operated rural merchandise stores servicing the Central West and beyond.

Sam and Molly Conway said they look forward to becoming part of the Wellington community, continuing to provide the friendly, local service which has been built by the Nott family.

Brendan Nott stays on in Wellington with Nick Sutherland and Maddie Eade who will be managing the Lee Street enterprise, which will expand to a wide range of animal health, livestock supplies, ag chemicals, fencing, fertiliser, general merchandise and more, along with the usual plumbing supplies Nott’s is known for.

Plasto – Richardson & Sinclair

The connection between the two businesses runs far deeper than a standard corporate transaction, rooted in decades of local history and genuine mateship.

Decades ago, Richardson & Sinclair co-founder Paul Sinclair and the Plasto family started their respective journeys at Dubbo saleyards as close friends.

Years later, that bond continued with Paul’s son, Scott Sinclair, and Plasto & Company owner, Ross Plasto.

When Richardson & Sinclair recently opened its new Wellington office, a natural conversation about the future began.

Ross was looking for a seamless succession plan that would protect his team, while Richardson & Sinclair was looking to grow.

Ray White Richardson & Sinclair director Justin Sanderson said ensuring the right fit for the close-knit team was the absolute priority.

“It was important for Ross that his business went to someone who was going to look after his staff and to someone with the same family-oriented values,” Mr Sanderson said.

“We are entirely like-minded when it comes to those old family values.”

Ray White Richardson & Sinclair has taken on the property management rent roll and welcomed all five of Ross’s staff members into the family.

While the two physical offices in Wellington will eventually combine into one big team, day-to-day operations remain completely seamless.

The acquisition also brings some major wins for the region’s property sectors, including the addition of Gary Francis to the group.

As a Chairman’s Club Life Member and previous winner of the Top Salesperson NSW and ACT award, Gary brings elite expertise to the team and will continue to service his loyal client base under the Ray White banner.

Vegetation screening plantings of solar farms

I’VE BEEN in contact with the Planning Minister’s office regarding the inadequate screening plantings of solar farms.

For the life of me I don’t know why there isn’t a mandated 30-50 metre native vegetation buffer around the perimeter of a solar project.

It would increase biodiversity, whilst screening out what 90 per cent of people don’t wish to look at.

Please don’t put batteries in your garbage bin – they catch fire

Council is urging residents not to dispose of batteries and embedded battery devices in their bins after waste in a garbage truck again caught on fire on Thursday, July 2.

The garbage truck was undertaking the domestic kerbside collection when the driver noticed smoke coming from the garbage truck’s load in the early hours of the morning.

The driver promptly emptied the load, and emergency services were called with the NSW Fire Brigade attending to extinguish the fire.

The load of garbage that was emptied onto the road was cleared away once the fire was put out.

It is believed that batteries caused the fire. Garbage trucks are high-valued and expensive assets and it’s not just the cost to replace a burnt truck, it’s the loss of the service they provide to our community.

Hazardous and prohibited items that cannot be placed in bins include:

- * lithium-ion batteries,
- * rechargeable batteries,
- * embedded battery devices, and
- * flammable liquids such as petrol, paint thinners and gas cylinders that are either full or empty.

Council has a free recycling program for embedded battery devices and household batteries at the Wellington Transfer Station or Whylandra Waste and Recycling Facility.

Household batteries can also be dropped off at the Customer Experience Centres at Wellington and Dubbo and both Wellington and the Dubbo Libraries in the designated stations so that outcomes like this can be avoided.

Plastic Free July

Residents across the region are being encouraged to swap single use plastics for reusable alternatives as part of Plastic Free July.

Council is backing the campaign locally, providing ways for the community to get involved in practical, everyday ways.

This isn’t about one big gesture, it’s about thousands of small choices people make every day.

Plastic Free July runs for one month, but Council is encouraging residents to carry these habits through the rest of the year.

The annual Plastic Free campaign is a global movement helping communities reduce plastic pollution and keep streets and public spaces cleaner.

New Community Grant for clean-ups

Council has launched its new Community Clean-Up Fund, allowing community organisations to access Council’s waste facilities free of charge when undertaking approved litter clean-up activities across the region.

Eligible groups, who have their grant application approved PRIOR TO ARRIVING AT THE TIP, will complete their clean-up activity then have the waste disposal fee waived at entry to their local waste facility.

The Community Clean-Up Fund aims to support volunteer and community-led clean-up activities across the region, encourage responsible disposal of waste collected during clean-ups, and improve local amenity.

All eligible groups are encouraged to apply for the grant and get involved. Eligible activities include general litter collected from public spaces, including parks or waterways, waste collected during organised illegal dumping clean-ups, and debris of vegetation collected as part of environmental clean-ups.

The funding stream is open for applications all year, and is eligible for community-based organisations, registered charities, incorporated groups, and not-for-profits to apply for.

Taking back footpaths and kicking e-bike clutter to the kerb

E-BIKES BLOCKING the path of pedestrians will be substantially cleaned up under rules to establish marked parking bays on the streets and at the kerbside.

The explosion in the number of shared e-bikes cluttering footpaths in the Sydney CBD and surrounding suburbs has frustrated many in our community.

A $6.6 million funding program will grant up to $200,000 per application to local councils and other public authorities to deliver e-bike parking and improve rider behaviour.

Councils will have the power to decide ‘no-go’ and ‘go-slow’ zones for shared and private e-bikes and will be able to choose which operators can set up in their area.

NSW is the first state in Australia to create a comprehensive regulatory framework to ensure e-bikes, pedestrians and businesses can begin sharing public spaces safely and without conflict.

Staged commencement of the new rules will occur in the coming months, giving councils and NSW Government land managers powers to set required parking zones and to penalise shared e-bike operators if they aren’t used.

To support this initiative, Transport for NSW will aim to deliver 250 parking bays for 2500 shared e-bikes this year.

The new rules build on a series of e-bike safety initiatives by the government, including:

- * Powers for NSW Police to seize and crush illegal, privately-owned e-bikes.

- * Reducing the 500-watt e-bike power limit introduced by the Liberals to 250-watts.
- * Introducing world-leading Standard to ensure e-bikes are pedalled and legal power output cannot be tampered with.
- * Proposing a minimum age limit to ride an e-bike.
- * NSW Police Strike Force Puma targeting dangerous e-bike and e-motorbike rideouts.
- * Imposing strict new safety standards on the sale of lithium-ion batteries.
- * Banning converted e-bikes from trains and Sydney Metro services to reduce the risk of fires.

The new Sharing Scheme Grant Program being launched will allow authorities to deliver the marked bays on streets and in appropriate zones at the kerbside.

Operators are funding the program through a 60-cent fee paid to Transport for NSW on each shared e-bike trip.

There are 16 local council areas playing host to shared bike schemes in Sydney from the City of Sydney, Inner West and North Sydney to Canterbury-Bankstown, Burwood and Parramatta.

Transport for NSW is able to revoke an operator’s approval for failing to meet the minimum standards and issue penalties of up to $55,000 if they do not comply with a removal order, plus $5500 for each day the offence continues.

The NSW Government has trialled marked parking bays with considerable success in reducing kicked over bikes and blocked footpaths by half.

Batteries cause garbage second truck fire

COUNCIL IS urging residents not to dispose of batteries and embedded battery devices in their bins after waste in a garbage truck again caught on fire on Thursday, July 2.

The garbage truck was undertaking the domestic kerbside collection run along Lonsdale Road, Minore when the driver noticed smoke coming from the garbage truck’s load in the early hours of the morning.

Manager Resource Recovery and Efficiency Luke Crittenden said it was believed that batteries caused the fire this time.

“Garbage trucks are high-valued assets, not just in the cost to replace them but the service they provide to our community,” he said.

“We had a similar situation in August last year when a truck driver had to empty the load in a Dubbo street.

“The quick action of the driver has ensured the garbage truck was not damaged however an extensive clean-up along Lonsdale Road had to be undertaken.”

Hazardous and prohibited items that cannot be placed in bins include lithium-ion batteries, rechargeable batteries, embedded battery devices, flammable liquids such as petrol, paint thinners and gas cylinders that are either full or empty.

“Council has a free recycling program for embedded battery devices and household batteries at Wellington Transfer Station and Whylandra Waste and Recycling Facility.

“Household batteries can also be dropped off.

High school vies for wether challenge win

WELLINGTON HIGH School has participated in the NSW Schools Merino Wether Challenge each year since 2018 with some successes in a competition between upwards of 70 schools from throughout the state.

The competition began at the annual Dubbo National Merino show and sale at Dubbo each August in the mid-2000s giving high school year 9 to 11 students a real ‘hands-on’ learning experience with six wethers they have to feed and prepare for the two-day showing.

Wellington High School agriculture curriculum teacher, Rod Dimmick said the students take ownership for managing their wethers which provides a unique and practical experience, much different from classroom learning.

“We have been quite competitive in the wool and carcase sections of the trial, but success is highly dependent on the weather and rainfall,” he said.

“The competition is based around a replacement wether, so basically in the eyes of a buyer looking for the best replacements for his flock.

“Wethers are judged on conformation, then shorn and the wool is weighed, valued and judged, then judged again as a bare-shorn animal on their carcase merit.

“One of the important parts of the competition is to match animals in a group as like setting up lines for quality.”

The National is held from August 11 and 12.

Preparing six Merino wethers for the annual NSW Schools Merino Challenge in August are Brock Ryan, Isaac Johnston, Olivia Dimmick, Annabella Gallop, Tempe Lemon and Lilly-May Kavanagh-Bailey.

Soldiers Club grant has encouraged Kelsie to excel

BACK HOME in town during her university semester break, Kelsie Wells called into the Wellington Soldiers Memorial Club to thank the club and Wellington Lions for her second club grant.

Kelsie, 19 years, has been fortunate is being awarded a club last of $3000 last year and $5000 this year, with all money going towards her accommodation rental.

She started a four-year High School teaching degree at the University of Newcastle last year, but after gaining two distinctions and two credits, decided to change to primary school teaching.

“I believe I would enjoy being in my own classroom for the year instead of having five different classes in different rooms if at high school,” she said.

“I feel that would develop a better relationship with my students and teach better.

“By putting the grant towards my rent I was able to focus more on my studies and not so much on employment throughout each term.

‘The grant just eased that pressure immensely.’

Kelsie said the club grant scholarship was a really good program, especially coming from a small town to gain this form of support is incredible.

“Families struggle with money and they can’t really help their children as much as they’d like.

“But, this program is a good opportunity to encourage more people to go to uni.

“Grants help lighten the burden while getting their degrees, then they can come back to their community.”

After four years study Kelsie said he aim was to bring back her studies.

“So, by bringing back my studies, hopefully I can be a good teacher that can help push my students so they can go to uni and then they can bring their studies back to continue the circle of better education,” Kelsie said.

“Being from a country town it definitely gives me a different perspective than a lot of my classmates at uni.

“Many are from cities and don’t have the perspective that I have from growing up here in a country town.

“And when we do discuss teaching in rural areas, some are all for it, but I don’t think they understand the struggles that come with it as well.

“Whereas I’ve lived here. I understand the struggle and the disadvantages.

“So I would teach differently then how they would because I can understand the troubles farm and town kids have compared to city kids.’

The Soldiers Club board believes in the program as it sees the constant brain drain leaving Wellington each year and not returning.

Asked if she thought this was a good program Kelsie said

Wellington Soldiers Memorial Club supervisor Janelle Nicholson, is with Kelsie Wells and her mother, Jo, when Kelsie visited the club last week to thank the board from the university grants program now running for the third year.

it was.

“There is a ‘teach rural’ program where a rural school can sponsor a student through uni and also give financial assistance,” she said.

“And at the end of your degree you have a guarantee of a job at that school, so if people had a school in mind where they’d like to teach at specifically, if they got that offer as well as this club grant the financial pressure of moving far away would be so much easier for them.

“Being away from home has been a lot easier as I have my partner with me and we are both studying at Newcastle uni.

“So it has been a lot easier for me than people going on their own.”

Council backs Country Mayor's 'Invest in us' Campaign

DUBBO REGIONAL Council has voted to back the Country Mayors Association of NSW Invest in Us campaign, advocating for increased Commonwealth Financial Assistance Grants to local governments.

The campaign seeks to restore at least 1 per cent of total Commonwealth taxation revenue for local Councils across Australia.

Mayor Josh Black called for Council to support the campaign during the June Ordinary Council meeting.

"Council's costs are rising. Wages, materials and everything that it takes to deliver the services our community relies on every day. This isn't new, and it's something I've been raising at every opportunity, because we need action, not just acknowledgement," he said.

"Federal and state grants are critical to how we keep this community running, but what we're getting now isn't keeping pace.

"The Invest in Us campaign is about fixing that."

Clr Black said Financial Assistance Grants existed to fund the basic services our community expected every day.

"We're not chasing money for new projects. We need funding that keeps the lights on, the bins collected and the roads repaired.

"Councils across Australia are saying to the Federal Government 'You can keep 99 per cent of tax revenue, just return the 1 per cent to local Councils to fund local services'.

"The cost of delivering those services for our community keeps climbing, and that gap has to be closed."

Local governments are responsible for over 30 per cent of Australia's public infrastructure and around 75pc of the national road network, however, local governments can only raise 3.5pc of the total taxation revenue while the Australian Government raises over 80pc.

Over the past several years the Financial Assistance Grants have been reduced from around 1pc of Commonwealth Taxation revenue to 0.49pc in the 2026/2027 Federal Budget.

The CMA campaign aims to raise public awareness, strengthen community understanding of Local Government funding challenges, and influence Federal policy-makers.

Intensive advocacy is already being undertaken by Country Mayors Association of NSW, Local Government NSW, the Australian Local Government Association and the United Services Union.

The Census is coming this August.

Carbon credit methodologies must be rigorous, equitable and underpinned by science

THE ANNOUNCEMENT from the Clean Energy Regulator that the Improved Native Forest Management Method (INFM) is now available under the Australian Carbon Credit Unit (ACCU) Scheme, flies in the face of good resource management, according to NSW Farmers.

It will allow state governments to earn Australian Carbon Credit Units (ACCUs) by voluntarily ceasing planned harvesting in defined areas of multiple-use public native forests.

However, as NSW Farmers President Xavier Martin pointed out, there’s a double standard at play.

“The INFM method is being used to bank credits for forests already targeted for protection - yet farmers have been blocked from banking carbon credits for not clearing land they may otherwise have cleared.

“If it is good enough for government, it is good enough for farmers,” Mr Martin said.

NSW Farmers is concerned that this new methodology is flawed, and does not meet the standards for Additionality, that is reducing emissions by additional actions which must be real and measurable.

Instead, it is calculating emissions reductions on carbon that is already stored in the forest, or stored in construction material, or in replacement regrowth, and timber imports will increase to replace our sustainably high value timber.

Therefore, there is no additionality and the Association supports calls for an independent assessment of the material considered by the Emissions Reduction Assurance Committee to have reached this decision.

“This flawed carbon accounting methodology is also being used to underpin the environmental rationale for the Great Koala National Park’s (GKNP), despite experts identifying serious integrity problems in the methodology,” Mr Martin said.

“To use carbon credits as a way of funding ever more national parks, such as the proposed GKNP, is poorly conceived.

“What has received little public scrutiny is the fact that the NSW Government will earn ACCU revenue for only 15 years, after which NSW taxpayers will be responsible for funding GKNP management for the remaining 85 years of the 100-year permanence obligation.

“The footprint of the proposed GKNP represents a massive over-reach and there has been no proper, in-depth consultation with impacted landholders whose perpetual leases have been forcibly acquired or on what it will mean for farmers and regional communities.

“The damage done to private landholders and their businesses is unacceptable and the projected outcomes for koala conservation are wild speculation, yet NSW taxpayers are being locked into these funding commitments for 100 years.”

NSW Farmers will continue to advocate that the GKNP be footprint be dramatically reduced and for farmers to be treated equally with public land managers when it comes to carbon credits and forestry operations.

Feds agree to support Great Western Highway fix - But silent on business support package

RECENTLY IN Question Time, I asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether the Federal Government had been approached by the NSW Government to fund roadworks on the Great Western Highway’s Convict Bridge, or to provide a business support package for local businesses devastated by the ongoing closure.

The Minister confirmed she has been approached by the NSW Government regarding potential federal assistance for roadworks, specifically the possibility of adding an extra lane, and clearly stated her support.

The fact that the Minister has signalled a willingness to help fund the roadworks demonstrates that community pressure is paying off.

Simply replicating an 1830s one-lane-each-way bottleneck is a secondbest solution. We’ve all had enough of second-rate patch-up jobs.

However, I am deeply troubled that her response was silent on a business support package.

In fact, there was no indication the NSW Government has even raised this issue with the Feds.

Our local businesses are being smashed by this closure.

The NSW Government’s current support package is utterly inadequate - insultingly so.

It’s worth reminding both governments that this fiasco was not caused by a natural disaster.

It is the direct result of government negligence and failure, and our communities are paying an extraordinarily high price for it.

Paltry one-off grants will not keep the doors of struggling businesses open, nor put food on the table for families.

Businesses are closing before our eyes. We need a meaningful, ongoing business support package - similar to the JobKeeper-style support provided during COVID.

Government negligence caused this disaster; governments must now take responsibility by funding real solutions that genuinely support our communities.

The Federal Government needs to put serious funding on the table.

I’ll continue to pile pressure on both the NSW and Federal Governments to deliver the support our communities deserve.

Rushed gun laws destroying local business

Last week in a speech to Parliament, I stood up for law-abiding gun owners and local businesses who are bearing the brunt of the government’s rushed firearm laws.

The new gun laws were a political response to the evil crime committed at Bondi last year.

Instead of calling for a Royal Commission into how this atrocity came to happen, the Government’s first reaction was to rush through tighter gun controls.

The new gun laws have been used to distract from the real issues and Government agency failings - which could and should have prevented the horrific attack.

These knee-jerk reforms are unfairly penalising the people who already do the right thing.

Our local small business owners have put their lives, their energy, and massive financial investments into their enterprises.

Now, because of these rushed laws, these local businesses are literally being destroyed.

We need to get to the bottom of what actually happened, protect our regional small businesses, and stop punishing law-abiding gun owners for political reasons.

It’s time state and federal governments stopped deflecting and started dealing with the genuine issues this country needs to address.

TODAY’S ELECTRICITY plans can make your head spin.

Peak rates. Shoulder rates. Off-peak rates. Super off-peak rates. Wholesale pricing. Electric vehicle plans. Battery plans. Free plans.

It all seems unnecessarily complicated, but behind the bewildering array of tariffs is one remarkably simple objective: encouraging us to use electricity when there’s excess.

That idea is far older than most people realise.

When electricity first arrived in Australian homes in the late 1800s, some houses didn’t even have meters. Customers were charged according to the number of light bulbs installed.

It wasn’t long before electricity meters became standard, charging households for what they actually used.

After the Second World War, factories that had been producing military equipment switched to making household appliances. Families started buying washing machines, electric ovens and electric hot water systems, sending electricity demand soaring.

Australia responded by building large coal-fired power stations in the 50’s and 60’s.

They produced vast amounts of reliable electricity but operated most efficiently when running steadily rather than constantly increasing and decreasing output.

Evening demand surged as families cooked dinner and switched on lights, but overnight demand fell dramatically while the generators kept producing power.

Instead of wasting that excess overnight electricity, suppliers came up with an ingenious solution.

In 1953, Zellweger ripple-control receivers were introduced into Australia, allowing electricity distributors to remotely switch a metered load on or off. Homes could have a second electricity meter connected to dedicated circuits powering hot water systems, slab heating and pool filters.

In return for allowing those appliances to operate when the grid needed them, households paid a much cheaper off-peak tariff.

It was one of Australia’s earliest examples of behavioural pricing. Rather than building more power stations, electricity companies simply encouraged people to shift when they used electricity.

Fast forward to today and the same principle still applies. Only the problem has completely reversed. Instead of having too much electricity at one o’clock in the morning from a coal-fired power station, Australia increasingly has too much electricity at one o’clock in the afternoon.

Millions of rooftop solar systems now flood the grid with energy during the middle of the day. On sunny days, wholesale electricity prices can even fall below zero when supply briefly exceeds demand.

So once again, electricity pricing is being used to change our behaviour.

The rollout of smart meters, accelerated after New South Wales deregulated metering in 2017, allows electricity consumption to be measured in segments of minutes instead of months. That gives retailers enormous flexibility to reward customers who can shift their electricity use to times when power is abundant or demand is low.

Electricity plans are now available that offer three or four hours of free electricity in the middle of the day.

Other plans offer four or six hours of electricity overnight at rates from four to eight cents per kilowatt hour – rather than the normal rates of 40 to 50 cents.

The cheapest electricity plan is no longer simply the one with the lowest advertised rate. It is the one that best matches the way your household lives - or the one that rewards you for modifying your habits.

The future promises even more change. Home batteries can be set to automatically charge when electricity is plentiful.

Weather forecasts and AI will increasingly decide whether to charge a home battery overnight or wait for tomorrow’s sunshine.

AI and smart meters will allow our homes to respond to price signals without us even thinking about it. For over a century, electricity meters have measured how much power we use. Increasingly, they’ll determine when we use it.

Landcare project encourages farmers to rethink ag waste

MID MACQUARIE Landcare is proud to be partnering with Net-Waste on a region-wide project targeting farm waste.

AgWaste project aims to raise awareness about the responsible management and disposal of waste generated through everyday farming practices across the Central West.

“The kind of rubbish we’re talking about includes old tyres, fencing wire, poly pipe, and plastics from silage and silo bags, among other materials,” Central West Regional Landcare Co-ordinator, Danielle Littlewood said.

“We know there’s a lot of this type of waste that ends up buried or burnt on farm, which can create ongoing environmental problems, potentially impacting soil health, water quality, livestock, wildlife, and the broader landscape.”

NetWaste Environmental Learning Advisor, Bill Tink said farmers are encouraged to take any ag waste to their local council waste facility,

“But to check with the facility first.

“Before loading up the trailer, it’s worth checking with your local council or waste facility about what agricultural waste they can accept, how it needs to be transported and whether any fees apply.,” Mr Tink said.

“Some materials cost money to dispose of because they require specialised handling, transport or recycling.

“There may be other materials that can’t be accepted locally, but you’ll be able to get advice from staff at your local waste facility about your options.”

Ms Littlewood said through the AgWaste project “we aim to give farmers the knowledge and confidence to manage their agricultural waste safely, legally and responsibly.

“Ultimately, we hope to reduce the amount of waste that’s stockpiled, buried or burnt on farms, while increasing opportunities for recycling and reuse in the central west.”

Across the region the project will encourage farmers to think about the longer-term impact of inappropriate waste disposal practices, including burning or burying waste on farm.

Local Landcare Co-ordinator, Deborah Cooke said that over coming months, Ag-Waste will be sharing information by focusing on a different farm waste topic each month.

“We encourage farmers and smaller landholders to keep an eye out and learn more about the options available to manage their agricultural waste responsibly,” she said.

“We always encourage the safe and responsible transport of waste and remind everyone to secure and cover loads before hitting the road.”

Mr Tink said by disposing of agricultural waste responsibly and ensuring loads were properly secured during transport, farmers can all play a part in protecting our local environment.

Weather

LAST WEEK was cold with a few showers, and this week is expected to remain much the same. Rain is expected on Saturday with light showers possible throughout the weekend. The cool, damp conditions are ideal for the development of fungal diseases in winter crops, so growers are encouraged to continue monitoring paddocks closely.

Crop Watch – Leaf Rust

Growers are encouraged to remain vigilant for leaf rust in cereal crops, particularly following the recent cool, moist conditions, which provide an ideal environment for the disease to develop and spread.

Leaf rust is a fungal disease that appears as small orange-brown pustules on the leaves of wheat and barley plants. These pustules release spores that are easily spread by wind, allowing the disease to move rapidly through crops.

As the infection progresses, leaf rust reduces the plant’s ability to photosynthesise, resulting in premature leaf death, reduced grain fill and lower yields.

Severe infections can also affect grain quality, impacting profitability at harvest.

Regular crop inspections are recommended, particularly in susceptible varieties and high-yielding crops with dense canopies.

Early detection is critical, as timely fungicide applications are most effective before the disease becomes widespread.

Good crop hygiene, crop rotation and selecting resistant varieties also play an important role in reducing future disease pressure.

Wool

EMI closed at 1904 c/kg clean, down 39 cents. Double-digit losses were recorded across most Merino Price Guide (MPG) microns in all three selling centres, with the softer market driven by lower-quality and poorly prepared wool.

A total of 32,259 bales were offered nationally, with 502 bales passed-in, resulting in a national pass-in rate of 16.9%. Merino fleece prices fell sharply on the opening day ranging from 21 to 89 cents, before stabilising on second day as buyers showed stronger competition for better-quality lots.

Merino skirtings followed a similar trend, while crossbred wool eased on day one before firming on day two. Growers responded to the softer market by holding onto their wool rather than selling into the cheaper conditions, helping the market settle towards the end of the sale.

Markets at a Glance

Wheat: $347/t, Feed Barley: $318/t, Chickpeas: $637/t, Sorghum: $352/t, Cotton: $601/bale, Oilseeds: $763/t.
Livestock
EYCI Cattle: 975c/kg, Trade Lamb: 1220c/kg, Wool (EMI): 1904c/kg clean.

As always, if you notice signs of leaf rust or other crop diseases, seek advice early to minimise production losses.

With cool, damp conditions forecast to continue, ongoing monitoring of both crops and livestock will be important throughout the week.

Stock clearance continues.

Correction still biting, but not as hard as last week

THE OPENING of the wool market’s 2026/27 selling season was weaker, similar as the previous week, however not quite as harsh in the falls. Again, the opening day suffered the majority of the price drop, with day two seeing some indicators record positive results. Skirtings also mirrored the fleece price softness, cardings slipped back 20 cents, and crossbreds were mainly stronger. All three selling centres were in action, Fremantle only for the first day, offering 32,259 bales. Growers have taken a strong position for the past two weeks in the falling market, which has seen the passed-in rate rise to over 16% in both sales. With AWTA seasonal test data reporting 271.7 million kgs was tested 2025/26, back from 295.4m kg the previous season, holding onto wool now going into what most likely will be a smaller clip again this season looks like a worthwhile gamble. This levelling out period is happening in a traditional time when the market is generally at its quietest for exporters and processors, with the industry only last year first trialling four sales before the recess to have a more orderly flow of wool onto the market. The balance between supply and demand has been the great driver for the past nine months, which has seen all participants along the chain report improved financial performance. The challenge will now be for all parties to hold the market at these levels and continue to work on growing the consumers interests and purchases. News from IWTO Conference in China last week was the launch of the IWTO Green Book which is International Wool Textile Organisation’s manual for the global wool industry on all things “green.” Centre piece is the science behind Biogenic Carbon accounting and life cycle analysis (LCA) in particular referencing the UE’s Product Environmental Footprint (PEF). The Biogenic Carbon paper delivered by Dr Paul Swan has been enthusiastically accepted by the global pipeline as it stands wool in a much better light against man-made oil-based fibres. There is still much debate in the science community about who is right in the carbon accounting space with only time and much more debate and research to quantify this science so important for the future of the ruminant industry. This week Tuesday/Wednesday sale days return, with 31,583 bales in all three selling centres. Macwool and Carmichael wool catalogued 2000 bales for yesterday.

Carbon credit methodologies must be rigorous, equitable and underpinned by science

THE ANNOUNCEMENT from the Clean Energy Regulator that the Improved Native Forest Management Method (INFM) is now available under the Australian Carbon Credit Unit (ACCU) Scheme, flies in the face of good resource management, according to NSW Farmers.

It will allow state governments to earn Australian Carbon Credit Units (ACCUs) by voluntarily ceasing planned harvesting in defined areas of multiple-use public native forests.

However, as NSW Farmers President Xavier Martin pointed out, there’s a double standard at play.

“The INFM method is being used to bank credits for forests already targeted for protection - yet farmers have been blocked from banking carbon credits for not clearing land they may otherwise have cleared.

“If it is good enough for government, it is good enough for farmers,” Mr Martin said.

NSW Farmers is concerned that this new methodology is flawed, and does not meet the standards for Additionality, that is reducing emissions by additional actions which must be real and measurable.

Instead, it is calculating emissions reductions on carbon that is already stored in the forest, or stored in construction material, or in replacement regrowth, and timber imports will increase to replace our sustainable high value timber.

Therefore, there is no additionality and the Association supports calls for an independent assessment of the material considered by the Emissions Reduction Assurance Committee to have reached this decision.

“This flawed carbon accounting methodology is also being used to underpin the environmental rationale for the Great Koala National Park’s (GKNP), despite experts identifying serious integrity problems in the methodology,” Mr Martin said.

“To use carbon credits as a way of funding ever more national parks, such as the proposed GKNP, is poorly conceived.

“What has received little public scrutiny is the fact that the NSW Government will earn ACCU revenue for only 15 years, after which NSW taxpayers will be responsible for funding GKNP management for the remaining 85 years of the 100-year permanence obligation.

“The footprint of the proposed GKNP represents a massive overreach and there has been no proper, in-depth consultation with impacted landholders whose perpetual leases have been forcibly acquired or on what it will mean for farmers and regional communities.

“The damage done to private landholders and their businesses is unacceptable and the projected outcomes for koala conservation are wild speculation, yet NSW taxpayers are being locked into these funding commitments for 100 years.”

NSW Farmers will continue to advocate that the GKNP be footprint be dramatically reduced and for farmers to be treated equally with public land managers when it comes to carbon credits and forestry operations.

Short Story - Part 2

Easter Saturday

A champ gets up when he can’t” Jack Dempsey.

“Chasing skirts hey, kid? Well, good luck there! And you speak, my young friend, an absolute truth about Queensland women - they’re cheap alright - was married to one some years back - the cheapest in the state she was - a massive disappointment. “But chasing women’s a nooooble cause - a most noble one and I’ll wager you’re a real gentleman with only the best of intentions like all Delungra boys - simply oozing morals and common decency. “Anyway, good luck kid because, I can’t help but think, with all them good intentions of yours, you’ll need it.” “Don’t need luck Pop, just the dough - a few dollars and I’ll be good for a week or so. I’m after the winner’s 25 too, that’s 40 bucks where I come from.” “Glad tu see yu can do add-ups kid. You should be a perfessor or own a bank or be an accountant with all that addin’ up ability. Now all you’ve got to do is win in’

The kid took a big, long swig. “I’ll win alright pop. Haven’t been beat yet - not once, - so don’t fret about that bit.” “O.K. ladies and gents, that’s it! Now we need just one more, a real tough one this time who’s a smart mover - who can take care of the big boy on the end there. “His name’s Bobby Lewis but they call him The Bear - and he’s a hard man and a good, solid puncher. Anyone who knocks him down gets 25 bucks and if he wins over three it’s another twenty-five on top of his 15 - that makes it 65 all up. So, who wants to take on the big boy?”

It’s fair to say The Bear, grinning away as he sipped his beer, looked very sure of himself.

He certainly made everyone stop and think. He looked to be about a hundred kilos and beefy enough but, on closer scrutiny, there was a hint of a beer gut. His big bushy moustache, hairy chest, and tattooed arms sure had everyone looking sideways.

One must never forget, at that time, tattoos meant a wharfie agitator, a serial wife basher or a multiple murderer - any-way someone of that ilk. Tattoos, at that time, were, a very worrying sign.

The big man just stood there sipping his beer, blowing smoke rings and smirking away at the peasants below who’d suddenly gone very quiet. No one was feeling confident - not a single hand went up.

The operator, trying all sorts of tricks and coming up empty was sweating freely now. For another ten minutes he kept at it, in the end all but begging - and getting nothing more for his efforts than a few nervous laughs.

For a minute I was thinking, Sam’s in big trouble here - he’s getting nowhere.

But a little voice in my head said, “Just hang on a sec pal, Honest Sam’s full of tricks, he’ll pull something out of that black hat of his - somehow or other, he’ll snag someone.”

And he did.

The oldest of tricks.

He said, “People say you Delungra boys have a name for being’ tough. I’m amazed - a hundred percent amazed I am - cause you look to be nuthin’ but a mob of scared little mouses hidin’ behind mummy, that’s all you is - a mob of scared little mouses.”

Pointing at someone at the back of the crowd he almost yelled, “Look at him, that one over there, the big, tall one, the one in the red shirt. He’s all grewed-up and looks tough alright but guess what? - He’s hanging on to Mummy’s hand. He’s nuthin’ more than big grewed-up mouse.”

“It’s grown up - not grewed up. You’re wrong again my good man - and, what’s more, you also said you all is - it’s you all are - you’re grammatically ignorant, sir.”

The Spruiker had had enough. His finger pointing directly at his tormenter he shouted, “Get stuffed pal! Go home and swallow half a packet of Ratsack. Wash it down with some sheep dip - then lie down and take it easy for a week or so!”

Another man said, “Look Sam, what he said is correct. There’

“You can get stuffed too, pal! Trot off home with your refined little mate there and gobble some ratsack too. Wash yours down with yoghurt. That should fix your sharp little minds.”

The spruiker turned, focussing once more on the man at the back “Look at the poor fellow - he’s grabbing mummy’s hand real tight - he’s nothing but a scared little mouse - he’s terrified!”

He continued pointing.

About half of the crowd turned to look. I did too. I couldn’t believe it. Sam was pointing at Cal and his red-headed wife and little girl. Cal’s wife tightened her grip on her husband’s arm, pulling him away.

“Look! He’s running off - what a scared little mouse he is! That’s Delungra manhood for you. A gutless wonder! Weak as water! I can’t help wondering who the poor kid really belongs to? You can’t be sure these days, especially when dealing with mouses.

“Them mouses is a tricky, immoral lot.”

The Bear laughed out loud, spilling his beer. Cal’s face reddened. In half a dozen strides he was up on the platform.

Cal leaned over and said, “Friend, you just bagged yourself a mouse.”

The spruiker was beaming.

Cal covered the mouthpiece with one hand and said a further something. The spruiker’s neck and face turned red as those up front heard and laughed.

“Well, well, Mighty Mouse is sure he can do it — is going to show us a thing or two. Says he’s ertain of just one thing — that there’s a coupla rats in town!

“Well! We’re in luck ladies and gents!

“We got ourselves a mouse that roars!

“Let’s see how loud he roars when he’s mixing it with The Bear.....he, he.”

“Look sir, it’s a couple of — not a coupla . You need to — Sam shouted, “Drop dead you over educated little dickhead!” Then continued, “O.K. ladies and gents, it’s on in ten, so don’t waste any time, there’s room for a hundred and twenty or more if everyone squeezes in tight and I guarantee it’ll be worth every cent, because we got The Mouse versus The Bear and The Mouse thinks he can take the big man.

“So, all you good people, this is your lucky day because there’s three good bouts and in the big one Mighty Mouse is taking on The Bear ...”

At the entrance, a short fat lady with green hair and smoking a cigar, coughed non-stop as she stuffed the takings into a calico bag.

Once inside, people crammed up tight and jostling for a view, talked, smoked and wondered aloud how anyone could survive three rounds with the Bear.

At the back two boys and a kelpie dog scrambled under the canvas, brushed themselves down and, in another minute, were lost in the crowd.

The first two bouts were more or less “ho-hum stuff.”

The local boys, half-drunk, overconfident and outclassed, with a lot of huffing and puffing were easily enough beaten.

The troupe boys, jabbing and dancing, put on a show that gave the locals something to talk about and maybe wager a few dollars on.

With the spieler in charge the crowd hissed at one curious ruling after another.

At the final bell, the boys shook hands, grabbed their money and a couple girls and, in another minute, were gone.

Chapter 3

The Main Bout — Mighty Mouse and the Bear — more curious decisions — rounds 1, 2 and 3.

I must admit, when it comes to boxing, I’m no aficionado - know only enough to tell you how it happened.

They came to the middle, each in the other’s face, as the spieler set down the rules, all the while the locals urging Cal to kill, or at the very least, maim, the big, hairy bastard.

As they touched gloves and turned away The Bear, with one mighty swing, collected Cal on the right temple. Cal staggered for a few seconds, then recovered to weave away while the crowd screamed foul and the spieler turned ref said, “Fair punch, fight on gents.”

For maybe two minutes, Cal ducked and weaved, somehow avoiding The Bear’s best efforts to end things quickly. But even so, Cal was taking a beating, was getting hurt bad.

The big man was strong and obviously enjoying himself as he slugged Cal hard both to the head and body. It was as if he was playing with Cal. But, even with both eyes badly swollen, the left one closing over and bleeding, Cal kept coming.

The Bear couldn’t quite believe it. It was about then he stopped smiling and started to take on this flummoxed look while, at the same time, belting Cal hard every time he closed in.

Towards the end of those first three minutes Cal landed a few good rights, and the Bear was stunned at the mouse’s power; that he still had it in him. But that was Cal — he was as lean as hell, fit and strong and looked as pigheaded as ever and so was willing to cop the pain to get his shots in.

That’s how Cal was, how he’d always been. The round ended with the crowd almost silent, Cal just hanging on, his legs not all that steady, his nose smashed sideways, and blood smeared over his face.

The second round began with more of the same; Cal, though, kept coming, getting hit, copping some real solid stuff but managing a few jabs and hooks of his own.

The Bear, by the middle of the round now wet with sweat and beginning to blow hard, butted Cal’s face, further crunching his nose. “No foul”, yelled the ref.

The crowd booed and hooted. “No foul,” the ref repeated and turning to the locals, shouted, “It was an accident - an unfortunate head clash, nothing more. Just bad luck.”

With the ref’s eyes elsewhere, The Bear ripped a right into Cal low down, crunching his privates hard. Cal, with all colour gone from his face and desperate to stay upright, next copped an elbow to his face.

His eyes bulging with pain, Cal went down, but somehow, with the crowd screaming, he scrambled to his knees, then, with the count on 8, was back on his feet.

The big man couldn’t believe that Cal, somehow or other, had survived all the rough stuff and, not only that, was beginning to move freely again.

For the first time the bear began dragging his feet and breathing hard while Cal was definitely looking stronger and starting to land some good, solid punches.

Suddenly the place was in uproar. At that point the bell rang. The second round was over.

Sam went over to Cal’s corner. He was waving his hands in the air, trying his best to get some message across. Amidst the pushing and shoving, I made my way to Cal’s corner to hear exactly what the ref was saying.

Up close now, I could see he was helping wipe the blood from Cal’s face while, at the same time, repeating, “Time to quit Mighty Mouse. It’s definitely time. You’ve copped a hiding - a bad one too. It’s time to quit. Throw it in mate - there’s no shame in it. I just don’t want to see you get hurt bad. I gotta tell you he gets a lot nastier in the third. You could get hurt bad. It’s time to quit. The fifteen bucks is there, it’s all yours — don’t go any further. It’s madness to. It’s over — yu done good but it’s time to quit. If you go on you could get hurt bad - real bad. Best to quit now Mighty Mouse.”

The school's secondary chess team also recorded a strong victory in the latest round of the NSW Country Schools Competition, defeating the Central West Leadership Academy 3.5-0.5. The team displayed excellent strategy, focus and teamwork throughout the match.

Congratulations to all students involved on their truly checkmate-worthy performances and for representing St Mary's with pride and focus while challenging themselves against students from other schools.

Warriors men climb to third ladder rung

LIGHTS AND action under the lights on Friday night when Wellington Warriors Over 35's men took on RSL 78's in an entertaining contest, eventually going down 4-2.

The Warriors started strongly, but injuries throughout the match left the side without any interchange players, and as fatigue set in, RSL 78's capitalised on their opportunities, finding the back of the net before the Warriors could regroup defensively.

Despite the result, there were plenty of positives to take from the performance, with the team's improvement continuing to show each week.

Ash Hocking was a deserving recipient of the Players' Player award after another outstanding effort.

Our over 30's Ladies took a rest as their opponents forfeited, giving them an easy three points to add to their tally.

On Sunday our Men's second grade side continued their impressive season, securing a convincing 2-0 victory over Dubbo Westside in a highly competitive contest.

With the win, the Warriors climb to third place on the competition ladder, with the team building strong momentum as the season progresses.

Leading from the front was captain Nick Streicher, who opened the scoring for the Warriors and delivered another outstanding performance in midfield.

His consistency, work rate and leadership throughout the match earned him the Player of the Match award.

The Warriors Open Women's team faced a tough challenge against ladder leaders RSL 78's Pink, going down 5-0.

While the scoreboard didn't reflect the effort and determination shown by the Warriors, the team demonstrated significant improvement from their previous meeting with RSL 78's.

With a strong focus on teamwork and ball movement, the ladies worked hard from the opening whistle until full-time and should be proud of their performance.

Olivia Dimmick was voted Players' Player after a determined display in defence, where her commitment, resilience and effort helped keep the Warriors fighting throughout the match.

With the Open Men now sitting third on the ladder and all three senior teams continuing to improve each week, the Wellington Warriors have plenty to be excited about as the season heads towards the business end.
